Make your own brew at a new pub in Boston. 4

ISTOCK AND PROVIDED

WELCOME TO WKND

MATT JULIA, BOSTON FEATURES EDITOR

Boston sports fans have a few days to relax before they start worrying about the Patriots' match-up against the Eagles in Super Bowl LII. Since Tom Brady and company are taking it easy this weekend, so should you. From the annual Hasty Pudding parade and roast to a brewpub where you can make your own beer, there are plenty of ways to have fun around town before the big game. Find out what's happening in the city this weekend ahead and at metro.us/things-to-do/boston.

NO EAGLES ALLOWED

1 Sorry, Eagles fans. From sports jerseys to Will Smith, a local park is taking a stand against all things Philly with an interesting new rule change. Find out where this Super Bowl rivalry-fueled ban is taking place. For more, see page 9.

ESPORTS MANIA

2 The Patriots might have the weekend off, but a different kind of championship is set to go down in the Hub. Get the scoop on what to expect from this year's ELeague Major Boston event at Agganis Arena. For more, see page 8.

5 THINGS TO DO

MAKE YOUR OWN BREWS

3 If you've always dreamed of a more personalized craft-brewery experience, head to Hopsters, a brewpub in the Seaport, this weekend. The make-your-own-beer concept is the first of its kind in New England. For more, see page 4.

HASSLE-FREE SKI TRIPS

4 Traveling is definitely the worst part about taking a ski trip. Thankfully, locals have a slew of options that should help take the hassle out of a mountain weekend getaway. For more, see page 14.

WOMAN OF THE YEAR

5 Actress Mila Kunis will be in town Thursday for Hasty Pudding's Woman of the Year parade and roast. Get the scoop on this year's festivities plus find out what else is going on around town this weekend. For more, see pages 6-7.

Making your own beer just got a lot easier. ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED

Hopsters hopes to give local craft-brew fans a more hands-on beer experience.

The Newton-based brewery, bar and restaurant recently opened its second location earlier this winter, bringing its make-your-own-beer concept — the first of its kind in New England — to Boston's Seaport. The latest addition to the ever-expanding neighborhood has set up shop in a sleek, 6,000-square-foot space on Sleeper Street, the first of 16 locations that are expected to open over the next six years.

"Ultimately, Hopsters' mission is to increase people's awareness around craft beer," Hopsters founder Lee Cooper tells Metro. "Obviously, that's to drink it and experience what it tastes like in the different styles of beer, but it's also getting involved in brewing your own beer."

The make-your-own-beer component of the Seaport location features 12 kettles at which guests can make up to 36 cases. They can also create custom labels to go with their brews.

The beer-making process takes about two hours of brewing, followed by two weeks of fermentation. Guests can choose to either have their beer delivered or they can stop by the brewery for self-pickup.

Thankfully, you don't need to be an experienced brewer to take part in the fun. Cooper notes that a beer expert will be on hand to guide visitors through the process.

"The majority of the people who come here, 99 percent of the people, have never brewed beer before," Cooper says.

Besides brewing your own beer, guests can also enjoy plenty of food and drinks in the bar and restaurant side of Hopsters.

Around 20 different styles of beers are kept on tap, including the brewery's popular Newtonian, a New England Imperial IPA featuring a "burst of citra aroma hoppyness" and mango pineapple flavors. Guests can try a variety of styles thanks to the beer flight option, as well as sip on cider and cocktail offerings.

The Seaport location's edible offerings are also a bit more robust than Newton's Hopsters, featuring everything from charcuterie and flatbread pizza to prime rib and lobster rolls.

Things you need to know about ELeague Major Boston

The esports tournament heads to the Hub this weekend. MATT JUUL

While Tom Brady and the Patriots are taking a much-needed rest before the Super Bowl, a different kind of championship is set to go down in Boston this weekend.

Some of the world's top esports athletes will throw down in the Hub for this year's ELeague Major Boston event. The highly anticipated video game tournament will take over Agganis Arena Jan. 26-28.

Ahead of this weekend's esports action, here are three things you need to know about ELeague Major Boston.

What are they playing? Attendees will get to see players take each other on in the fan-favorite, first-person shooter "Counter-Strike: Global Offensive." Similar to "Call of Duty" or "Battlefield," the multiplayer game involves a lot of military-style action using a variety of virtual weapons. During each match, teams also try to defeat each other by completing certain objectives, such as defusing or planting bombs.

How does it work?

After whittling the playing field at qualifying events in Atlanta over the past few weeks, the remaining eight teams will ship up to Boston for the champions stage. The opening round of matches will take place on Friday and Saturday, including a battle between America's Cloud9 team and Spain's G2 Esports. The semifinals will also take place Saturday, with the championship match set to go down at 2 p.m. on Sunday. A cool $1 million purse will be on the line.

What can fans expect?

Fans who stop by the festivities will be able to take home a few goodies. Not only will RFID-enabled badges give attendees access to the arena, but they can also be linked to fans' Steam accounts for special in-game item drops. ELeague will be giving away gift bags in person as well. Attendees can expect a slew of other fun activities too, including autograph and photo sessions, an interactive polling game, giveaways, plus concessions and merchandise for sale.

Boston park bans Will Smith, Rocky and Philadelphia-themed products

Sorry, Eagles fans.
MATT JUUL

A Boston park is taking a stand against Eagles fans ahead of Super Bowl LII.

The Esplanade Association, the nonprofit behind the Hub's Charles River Esplanade, announced a temporary rule change Tuesday that probably won't go over well with any visitors from the City of Brotherly Love.

According to a tongue-in-cheek press release, Philadelphia-themed products will temporarily be banned from the 3.5 mile area between the Museum of Science and the Boston University Bridge.

The rule change will stay in effect until Monday, Feb. 5, the day after the Eagles take on the Patriots in Minnesota at this year's Super Bowl.

Besides Eagles jerseys, all Philadelphia sports apparel has been banned,

Local Eagles fans aren't going to be happy about this rule change. GETTY IMAGES including Flyers, Phillies and 76ers gear. Anything in the color of "midnight green" has also been barred from the park.

The Esplanade Association is taking things a step further, announcing that "The Fresh Prince of Bel-Air" star and Philly native Will Smith, as well as "Rocky" actor Sylvester Stallone, won't be allowed to enjoy the park, either. Hopefully they weren't planning any trips to Boston anytime soon.

Philly foods aren't welcome, either. Cheese-teaks, soft pretzels, Philadelphia brand cream cheese and Crisco are all banned.

"We realized that appearing in a Super Bowl for only the third time — and first time since losing to the Patriots in 2005 — was disorienting for Philadelphia fans and that clarity on acceptable items to bring in our park should be offered," Executive Director of the Esplanade Association Michael Nichols said in a cheeky statement. "Given the Patriots are appearing in their record-extending 10th Super Bowl, we understand this information may not be needed by most park visitors."

It'll be interesting to see if any parks in Philly retaliate by banning lobster rolls, Tom Brady jerseys and Mark Wahlberg — although the Boston actor might get a pass since he starred as a former Eagles player in the 2006 flick "Invincible."

Former US Gymnastics doctor Larry Nassar gets 175 years in prison

The sentencing comes after a weeklong hearing that saw many of his accusers testify. JOE PANTORNO

Former United States Olympics gymnastics doctor Larry Nassar was sentenced to 40 to 175 years in prison for criminal sexual conduct by a Michigan court Wednesday morning, concluding a weeklong hearing that saw many of his victims step forward and testify.

"I just signed your death warrant," Judge Rosemarie Aquilina told Nassar in the Lansing, Michigan, courtroom. The disgraced former doctor was already sentenced to 60 years in prison in December on child-pornography charges.

"Your words these past several days have had a significant emotional effect on myself and shaken me to my core," Nassar said in a final statement. "I will carry your words with me for the rest of my days."

The 54-year-old had pleaded guilty to seven counts of criminal sexual misconduct before the sentencing hearing, which saw 168 impact statements given by his accusers as a part of his plea deal set by Judge Aquilina.

"You are no longer victims. You are survivors. You are very strong," Judge Aquilina said to those who testified.

"You did this for your pleasure and your control," she told to Nassar. "I would not send my dogs to you, sir. ... You can't give them back their innocence, their youth. ... It was my honor and privilege to sentence you. You do not have the right or privilege to walk outside a prison ever again."

The seven days of testimonies were highlighted by Olympic gold medalist Aly Raisman, who delivered an emotional 13-minute statement.

"You do realize now the women you so heartlessly abused over such a long period of time are now a force? And you are nothing?" she asked Nassar.

sar. "I will not rest until every last trace of your influence on this sport has been destroyed like the cancer it is."

Nassar began working with United States Gymnastics in 1986 while completing his osteopathic medical degree at Michigan State University. Ten years later, he was appointed as national medical coordinator of U.S. Gymnastics.

For over two decades, Nassar sexually abused countless gymnasts, most of them minors, as he used his power to take advantage of unassuming patients.

However, in a letter he wrote to the court last week, Nassar again defended his actions and put blame on the victims. Judge Aquilina read aloud parts of that letter Wednesday.

"I was a good doctor because my treatments worked, and those patients that are now speaking out are the same ones that praised and came back over and over," Nassar wrote in the letter. "The media convinced them that everything I did was wrong and bad. They feel I broke their trust. Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned."

Michigan Assistant Attorney General Angela

"The media convinced them that everything I did was wrong and bad. They feel I broke their trust. Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned."

Larry Nassar

Povilaitis said in her final remarks the sentencing hearing would be viewed as "a turning point in how our community, our state, our nation, our culture looks at sexual abuse."

In 2016, Rachael Denhollander was the first to come forward to file a criminal complaint accusing Nassar of abusing her from 1994-2000. Denhollander's heroics opened the floodgates for more than 140 women to step forward to accuse Nassar, including Simone Biles, Gabby Douglas and McKayla Maroney.

Hub and Spoke thrives in Eastie school cafeterias

The lunch program's first semester proved successful, and there are talks of expanding it to other areas of the district. SAMANTHA J. GROSS

It's lunchtime, and young customers rush in to grab a quick bite. Some head for the hot station and check out the day's selection of crisp, roasted vegetables, fresh-cut meats or pasta. Others hit the cold bar and explore a selection of grains, beans and greens. They customize their meals with a dressing or sauce of their choice and head to meet their friends.

No, it isn't a high-end restaurant for children or an elite boarding-school commissary. It's the Bradley Elementary School in East Boston, a participant of the Hub and Spoke Project.

The project, which started last May, is an experiment aimed at bringing locally prepared meals to three schools in East Boston that do not have full-service kitchens. The program uses East Boston High School's full-service kitchen to prepare meals for the three nearby "satellite kitchens" — Bradley Elementary, East Boston Early Education Center and Patrick J. Kennedy Elementary.

As part of the program, funded by the Shah Family Foundation, the participating schools received Welbilt "combi-ovens," which allow for steaming, roasting and even frying multiple types of food at one time without cross-contamination.

Entrepreneur and philanthropist Jill Shah, whose husband, Niraj Shah, founded e-commerce site Wayfair, said she was inspired to take action after she saw how frozen food was "prepared" at BPS schools. When Shah called the mayor's office, they told her that it would cost Boston upward of $1 million to create a full-service kitchen.

"It takes patience to peel back the onion," said Shah, who proved it cost $65,000 to start up their program. Each lunch costs the city $3.41 or less, the figure budgeted for each child's lunch, plus labor and maintenance.

Of the 125 schools in the district, only 43 have full-service kitchens, so the schools rely on vendors to provide more than 13 million packaged meals a year.

This is not the first time the city has been pressed to make school lunch a priority. In 2013, John Connolly ran against Mayor Marty Walsh as the self-titled "education candidate," running TV advertisements calling for schools to rid cafeterias of expired food. In June 2015, the Citywide Parent Council proposed that BPS restore $2.3 million into the budget to reopen in-school kitchens, an item that was cut that April.

That same year, Superintendent Tommy Chang brought on San Francisco-based Revolution Foods and hired Laura Benavidez as the district's first food and nutrition services director in three years.

The program's first semester proved successful, and there are talks of expanding it to other areas of the school district. For now, they are still "working out the kinks," said Daniel O'Brien, Boston Public Schools spokesman.

The Hub and Spoke Project brought in partners like Ken Oringer of Toro, Coppa, Uni and Little Donkey fame, local managers from Sweetgreen, restaurant designers from Real-Food Consulting, former president of Trader Joe's Doug Rauch, Friendly's CEO John Maguire and former Shop & Stop CEO José Alvarez.

The program's future looks bright, per Shah and her cohort.

"Our goal is to retrofit every school in the city of Boston," Shah said. "We think about it in years, not decades."

East Boston's successful Hub and Spoke project may expand to other schools in the district. ISTOCK

Montréal En Lumière

Let the light shine on Canada's premiere winter party. RICHARD SILVERSTEIN

Summer may traditionally be thought of as festival season, but next month things will really be heating up for fans of fine food, booze, music and more in the cultural capital of our neighbor to the north, Montréal.

First-time visitors are sure to be transfixed by the city's European feel (not just because ils parlent français, but due to the architecture, cuisine and population's general mode de vie). With more colleges and universities per capita than even Boston (and the most in North America) there's an astute, youthful vibe to the place, only complemented by the centuries-old cathedrals and cobbled streets travelers delight in when exploring the Old Town.

Return visitors will be stunned by all of the new, inventive options that've sprung up, as Montréal's entertainment scene has really experienced a renaissance in recent years. And with a stellar mass-transit system, it's dead easy to get to know different neighborhoods across the sprawling city.

So what's the best way to get a taste of everything? You got it — attend the festival of lights.

What's it all about?

Between Feb. 22 to March 4, more than 1 million folks are expected to visit Montréal En Lumière, which is one of the largest winter festivals in the world and will be celebrating its 19th year in 2018. During those 11 days the crème de la crème of international culinary and collaborative arts scenes get the spotlight they deserve, and most events are free to the public. Here are some highlights.

For foodies

Scores of the top names in fine dining, celebrity chefs and globally recognized vineyards descend on the city to put on literally hundreds of events, from exotic tastes (like gastronomic tours of Italy, the Ukraine, Belgium, Mexico and more) to hands-on workshops on charcuterie, and family-themed experiences such as grandmother-granddaughter cooking and kitchen fun with kids to expert wine pairings (and tastings — yum!), there's truly something for every palate. Many of the events are free, but there are also ticketed wine and champagne brunches, lunches and dinners with multiple courses at venues throughout the city. Feeling more Mountie than traditional Michelin? Opt for a meal based entirely on maple!

Gig goers

Motown, the Martha Graham Dance Academy, maestros of all makes of instrument and masters of the stage all hustle for the spotlight at performance spaces across Montréal during the festival. So whether you're in the mood for some Édith Piaf, Isabelle Boulay or experimental cultural catnip, you're covered.

Outside? Really?!

Sure, it's likely you'll need to don your thermals to enjoy them, but a hearty New Englander like you should have no problem exploring the myriad art, tech and light installations that are completely free to wander with wonder. "Pocket" will be a giant reproduction of a French torch that will light up along with music. "Chimes" will bring together lights and sound in a completely different way. "Nor Mind" promises an interactive sculpture that will react to its audience. And those are just the beginning. There's also going to be a ferris wheel, a "family fun zone" with slides and games, a zip line and Winter Olympic-themed activities such as ice hockey, cross-country skiing and mogul skiing.

Let's go!

In order to plan your trip, check out the schedule of offerings on montrealenlumiere.com/en/ and build out an itinerary.

Getting there

Air Canada and WestJet will get you from Logan to Montréal's Pierre Elliott Trudeau in around an hour and a half for not much more money than the bus companies (around eight hours) or Amtrak (about six hours, but traveling late at night). If you opt for your own set of wheels it's about five hours, with beautiful scenery along the way.

Be sure to bring a valid passport regardless — this border may not have an imposing wall (yet?), but you'll need proper documentation to enter and return home.

An immersive experience

Take the hassle out of your next ski trip. GETTY IMAGES

3 ways to take the hassle out of ski trips

No ride? No problem.

ERIC WILBUR

Maybe your skis are staring at you from across your apartment, wondering exactly when their automobile-deficient owner is going to find transportation to the mountains this winter. No issue.

There are at least three easy ways to rectify that short of hitchhiking up 93 North.

Every weekend skiers and riders can ride the MBTA to Wachusett Mountain in Princeton, door-to-door service that cuts out the need for gas. Trains depart North Station in Boston Saturdays and Sundays at 8:35 a.m., arriving at the Wachusett Station just after 10. There's a shuttle from there that will be taking passengers the extra 10 minutes to the base of the mountain. Return trips leave the station at 5:11 p.m., and get back to Boston by 6:10 p.m.

Each train features a designated ski car for easy storage of equipment, and costs $11.50 each way. If the train doesn't work for you, the Wachusett Station also serves as an Uber dropoff, from where skiers and riders can catch the same shuttle. Visit wachusett.com for more information.

Skedaddle is another ride-sharing program that has recently launched skiing destinations to its repertoire. The Boston-based, on-demand travel app is currently offering $5 round-trip rides from Boston to Loon Mountain Resort and Mount Sunapee through February.

This weekend, for instance, the transportation leaves Boston (1096 Boylston St.) at 6:30 a.m., scheduled to arrive at Loon at 9:03 a.m. Return trip leaves the resort at 5 p.m., back in Boston before 8. The $5 cost does not — obviously — include lift tickets.

Visit letskedaddle.com/events for more information and a list of other destinations currently available.

Boston Ski and Sports Club has also long been a leader in creating weekends around buses destined for the slopes. The outlet offers day trips, weekends and other excursions as part of its busy schedule.

These prices do include lift tickets. A Sunday trip to Sugarbush this weekend would run non cub-members $92, a price that includes transportation and lifts. Consider that a regular full-day window rate at Sugarbush is $119 this season, and that's a pretty sweet deal already. Grabbing a nap instead of a steering wheel? Even better.

Boston Ski and Sports Club has day trips planned into April; weekend trips slated for Sunday River, Stowe and Killington still this season. Visit bssc.com ski-ride for a complete roundup.

No disrespect to Philly, but let's talk about next season for a moment

Is it too early to talk about next year?

I can do this, because I'm not employed by the New England Patriots. And let me be clear, by no way am I overlooking the Philadelphia Eagles in Super Bowl LII.

If the Eagles stop chirping about how they're going to "de-throne" Brady, and if they refuse to make any "guarantees" for the next week and a half, then I believe they'll be able to effectively use the underdog card and have a chance to escape with a win in Minnesota on Feb. 4.

Regardless of the outcome, nobody can deny that one of the biggest topics in the NFL this season has been the future of the Patriots organization.

For several years, Jimmy Garoppolo's presence had been the elephant in the room. With free agency looming, the Patriots traded him in October. Speculation continued as to who made that decision. Throughout it all, drama surrounding Tom Brady's personal trainer, Alex Guerrero, came to the forefront. Then, ESPN released a feature story that claimed everything in New England was falling apart behind the scenes.

When you tell me it's falling apart, you're telling me Bill Belichick is leaving. And for the sake of argument here, let's just say the Patriots — a 5.5-point favorite — win the Super Bowl next week. That would mean back-to-back championships. It would also mean a

DANNY PICARD

Listen to "The Danny Picard Show" at dannypicard.com.
Follow him on Twitter @dannypicard chance to win three straight Super Bowls next year; a three-peat, if you will. Because the Patriots are already the favorite to win Super Bowl LIII in Atlanta, at +500.

Would Belichick really walk away from that opportunity? Sure, he's losing his offensive and defensive coordinators to head coaching jobs, but Julian Edelman's return next season will improve the team more than losing Josh McDaniels and Matt Patricia will hurt it.

It's clear the Patriots are in "win as many Super Bowls as you can with Brady" mode. But you have to get there first. Even if they don't beat the Eagles next Sunday, they'll at least have multiple opportunities to get back to the big game.

This really doesn't seem like any "last hurrah" for Tom Brady and the Patriots. GETTY IMAGES

So when I look ahead to next year, it shouldn't be considered "disrespectful" to anybody in Philadelphia. Because the question I'm about to ask is a real one.

What AFC team is ready to knock off the Patriots and prevent them from advancing to next year's Super Bowl?

It's certainly not anyone in the AFC East. If the Bills, Dolphins, or Jets make a play at a quarterback like Kirk Cousins in the offseason, perhaps they'll make things within the division a little more interesting, but I still wouldn't put money on Cousins to step right in and slay the beast.

You've got your obvious contender in the Pittsburgh Steelers, who have the second-best odds of winning next year's Super Bowl, at +1000. But that might change if they lose Le'Veon Bell in free agency.

Then you have the ever-so-unpredictable AFC West that'll most likely see the Kansas City Chiefs move on from Alex Smith. The Los Angeles Chargers are the Chargers. The Denver Broncos don't know what they want to do at the quarterback position. And weren't Derek Carr and the Oakland Raiders supposed to be the next big thing in the AFC this past season? They went 6-10. So good luck with that, Jon Gruden.

I believe the biggest in-conference threat during the rest of the Brady era will be the Houston Texans, thanks to the emergence of Deshaun Watson. The rest of the AFC South will improve if Andrew Luck returns for the Indianapolis Colts and if the Jacksonville Jaguars can keep dominating on the defensive side of the ball. I just think Watson's talents — when he returns from rehabbing his knee — make Houston the toughest opponent in the conference.

And I still can't sit here and tell you that will be enough to prevent the Patriots from going to Atlanta next February.

So when they talk about the potential demise of New England's dynasty, even before knowing the result of next Sunday's game, don't forget it's more probable than not that the Patriots will be making their third straight Super Bowl appearance in 2019.

Which begs the question, is it too early to talk about Super Bowl LIV in Miami?

Concerns aplenty for Patriots

A look at areas the Eagles will look to exploit in Super Bowl LII.

matthew.burke@metro.us

This is by no means an all-time great Patriots team.

Without Julian Edelman (their top WR), Dont'a Hightower (their top defensive player) and Martellus Bennett (boy, could the Pats have used him against Jacksonville), this year's Patriots are good enough to win a Super Bowl but don't exactly stack up to the 2003-04 Pats, or the 2007 Pats, or the franchise's last two Super Bowl winners.

There are weaknesses for this Patriots team across the board (except at QB, of course), so let's take a look at the areas the Eagles are most likely to exploit.

Offensive line

The Patriots have not had a great offensive line for a while now. Two years ago in the AFC Championship game, Denver absolutely pummeled the New England line and hurried Tom Brady over and over again. The result was Brady throwing two interceptions and completing only 27-of-56 passes in a 20-18 Patriots loss.

Tennessee's Corey Davis hauls in a touchdown pass over Malcolm Butler in the Divisional Round of this year's NFL playoffs. GETTY IMAGES

Bill Belichick rarely discards members of his coaching staff, but he fired O-line coach Dave DeGuglielmo immediately after that loss and brought back old man Dante Scarnecchia out of retirement to fix the matter. Scarnecchia has done a nice job of getting the line stable, but this line does not exactly resemble that of the early 1990s Dallas Cowboys. The personnel is so-so, and it relies mostly on the fact that Brady is one of the best at getting rid of the ball quickly.

The Eagles' top strength is their defensive line, so this looks like a mismatch.

Linebacker

As mentioned above, Hightower was the Patriots' defensive leader – calling out the plays on D – and hasn't been replaced since going down with a season-ending injury. Kyle Van Noy, Elandon Roberts and Marquis Flowers all play above their heads but there's a reason why the Pats had to scoop up James Harrison off the scrap heap last month.

Harrison is still good at getting to the quarterback, but the Pats' pass coverage is highly suspect. That's a definite issue against an Andy Reid-style offense (which the Pats have

MVP odds

A look at the MVP odds ahead of Super Bowl LII.
Tom Brady, Patriots: 6/5
Nick Foles, Eagles: 15/2

often had trouble with) which spreads the field.

In the Pats' 42-27 opening night loss to Reid's Chiefs this season, Kareem Hunt not only rushed for 148 yards but also caught five balls for 98 yards. Jay Ajayi is a very strong pass-catching back, and could be in-store for a Hunt-like evening in Super Bowl LII.

Secondary

The Patriots had a bitter contract dispute with Malcolm Butler this past offseason and since then Butler has regressed greatly for whatever reason. Fellow cornerback Stephon Gilmore has gotten better as the season has progressed, and came up with a key play to ice the game against Jacksonville, but on the whole he's been a disappointment as the Pats' top offseason signing last spring.

The Pats gave up a whopping 251.3 passing yards per game this season, giving them the 30th ranked pass defense in the NFL. That said, they only gave up 18.5 points per game this season – good for fifth overall in the league.

The moral of the story is that Nick Foles should be able to move the Eagles up and down the field on New England. Getting touchdowns will be tough, but Philly was one of the top red zone teams in the league this year. Foles will be throwing a lot in this one, no doubt.

metro.us/horoscopes

Aries Indulgent behavior will get you into trouble. Partnerships will take a dive if you aren't a team player. Choose to make a romantic gesture over a hostile impasse.

Taurus Engage in talks that will broaden your outlook or help you make wise decisions regarding your position, status or relationships with others.

Gemini Discussing matters regarding a joint venture, family inheritance or settlement will shed light on when things will wrap up. A personal claim can be made.

Cancer Don't shy away from an unusual opportunity. Embrace the future with optimism and openness. You have plenty to gain if you use your intelligence.

Leo Overreacting will lead to trouble. Try to understand what's actually happening, instead of acting on an assumption you've made. Keep situations in perspective.

Virgo A short trip to visit someone from your past will be enlightening. If you express your feelings openly, you'll discover that someone you like shares your thoughts.

Libra Look over and take care of money matters or settlements. Act on your own behalf and refuse to let personal influences get in the way of you doing what's right.

Scorpio Your emotions will be close to the surface. Get what's bothering you off your chest. Speak up and find out how others feel before you make a move or final decision.

Sagittarius Discipline will go a long way. Sort through all the information offered before you commit to help someone else get ahead. You'll have regrets if you sell yourself short.

Capricorn Make a positive lifestyle change. Contribute to your savings and update any documents before they lapse. Home improvements should be budgeted carefully.

Aquarius Keep a low profile and work quietly on your own to get things done. Refuse to let personal matters deter you from taking care of your responsibilities.

Pisces Share your experience with people you want to impress. A chance to make a difference for someone will be helpful when you need something in return. EUGENIA LAST
